Coastal Visions

Veteran photographer Robert Mihovil stalked rodeos, tugboats, beauty pageants and even a top-secret spacecraft to produce a coffee-table pictorial of Galveston County.

The 145 images in the hardcover book are punctuated with text by local writer Leslie Watts, helping spell out Galveston County's past, present and future directions.

"This is for anybody who loves Galveston County," said Mihovil, a fourth-generation islander known for his work documenting Hurricane Ike, as well as feature and corporate photography across the county. "If you're bringing folks in from out of town, they'll get a good deal of what the county is all about."

The book was two years in the making, prompted by county officials aiming to showcase all the county has to offer. A profiles section in the back of the 9-by-12 book describes the region's leading corporations and organizations. That section financed the cost of the book project so that no county funds were used.

County officials envisioned a book to be used as a development tool. In keeping with that aim, Mihovil recruited chamber of commerce staff from across the county to each write out a list of 10 photographs that would tell the story of their town.

With top-10 lists in hand, Mihovil loaded his car with lighting equipment, tripods and cameras, traveling to festivals, events and landmarks across the county. The mission took more than a year to complete.

"You really don't realize how big the county is 'til you drive the whole thing from one end to the other," he said. "It's huge."

Mihovil, who photographed for The Daily News in the 1980s and photographs now for the newspaper's Coast magazine, was no stranger to Galveston sights. But he was surprised by the variety of events that took place throughout the county.

"There are a lot of things over the causeway I didn't know about that I learned from doing this book," said Mihovil. He and his wife, Sally, a nurse at University of Texas Medical Branch, live in Galveston with their two Labrador retrievers, a Pomeranian and two cats.

The final collection of images include beaches, longhorn steers, windmills, beauty pageants, a train depot, the 1894 Grand Opera House, lighthouses, churches, coastal birds, the 1877 tall ship Elissa, historic homes, parades, band concerts, gardens, motorcycle rallies, sailboat regattas, a winery, tugboats, refineries, carnival rides, grain elevators, an oil tanker, rodeos, cruise ships, a biocontainment laboratory, a World War I concrete ship and a roller coaster.

The most challenging assignment took him to NASA to photograph a mock-up of a new vehicle designed for long-range space travel. "It took a month to track down folks, to get special permission to get inside, to get clearances and a background check," he said.

The spacecraft provided a fitting finale for a portrait of the county. "Galveston and Galveston County have such a strong history and they look toward the future," he said.
